I just woke up in a motel.
I have no idea who I am or how I got here.
But I do know three things.
There's a body on the floor...and one in the bathtub.
There's a bullet in my arm. And it hurts. Bad.
And there's a vampire warlock right outside the door.
And he's coming to finish the job.

"If it isn't my favorite Reaper."

"You're like my third favorite vampire," I said.

"Sit."

I looked at the chairs like they'd been plucked from a dumpster fire. "I'll stand if it's all the same to you."

"I should have selected a more pliable individual." Aldric snapped his fingers, which had no effect on me. I'd seen humans willing to throw themselves off high-rises after such a gesture. Training at Black Sea Holdings was...a little different, let's say. "One of my few regrets."

"I believe the way you described me was a diamond in the rough."

"Sometimes diamonds are merely cubic zirconia."

"Is that why you tried to kill me?" I asked.

Agnes rose from the table and headed for the thin door. Before reaching for the handle, my lawyer looked back.

"Coming?"

"Now?"

"No time like the present, Miss Hunter." She patted the briefcase. "I have your bail money."

"I thought you were clearing my name."

"Honey," Agnes said, with what almost looked like pity, "a word of advice."

"I'm all ears."

"No one's going to look out for you but you."

Which shouted one thing loud and clear.

After I got out of jail, I was on my own.
